According to David Pells, PMWL managing director, "Giulia Gasparini demonstrated the talent and commitment that we hoped to attract to this research program. She contributed some very interesting and educational resources to the library, some of which should be quite useful to practitioners worldwide. Thank you, Giulia!"

Giulia Gasparini stated, "I enjoyed the research internship and would like to continue contributing to the PM World Library. I learned a lot more about project management and also how much other information might be useful for planning projects, not just those things labeled as 'project management'. I also met some interesting people in distant places. I would definitely recommend this program to other students."

Pells added, "I'm happy to have our first completed internship. The students have been very active, keeping us busy adding their resources to the library each week. I hope they are benefiting as much as our readers now are."

Interns receive a Certificate of Completion and Letter of Recommendation on successful completion. Internship may or may not qualify for university credit (students are responsible for applying for university credit).
