PhD and post-doctoral researchers worldwide invited to become PM World Library Research Scholars

23 November 2018 – Dallas, London, Sydney – PM World has announced the launch of a project management research scholar program through the PM World Library (PMWL). Free access to the PMWL is offered to qualified scholars who are conducting research on P/PM topics, especially research aimed at solving regional or global problems.

Candidates are expected to be PhD level graduate students, those recently granted PhD or doctoral degrees and engaged in post-graduate research, or professors of project management. Participating scholars will be encouraged to post their research results in the PMWJ or PMWL and to help expand and enhance the resources in the library related to her or his research topic. This program is intended to provide project management researchers with additional visibility, resources and support.

Each Research Scholar will have a scholar showcase webpage posted on the PMWL and PMWJ websites where the scholar's profile, research interests/activities, and access to publications will be posted. Each scholar will also receive unlimited free access to everything in the PM World Library; recognition with research results posted in the library; publishing opportunities in the PM World Journal; ongoing visibility; a certificate; and other benefits. According to David Pells, PMWL Director, "We've had a successful research internship program for graduate students running now for about two years. We thought it might be useful to offer a similar program for PhD and post-doctoral researchers, to help stimulate and support PM research at the highest levels."
