AIPM choose Praxis Framework™ as their body of knowledge partner for members

5 December 2019 – Sydney, Australia – The Australian Institute of Project Management (AIPM) has announced that it has selected the Praxis Framework as the basis of a new knowledge management system available to Project and Programme Managers through their member portal. AIPM chose to base their body of knowledge on the Praxis Framework due its integrated nature and alignment with other frameworks.

Elizabeth Foley, CEO, AIPM comments, “AIPM has found Praxis Framework to be an excellent and efficient best practice model. That the framework encompasses knowledge, method, competency and maturity reduces training costs and decreases the time needed to maintain a project delivery infrastructure. We also liked the accessibility of the framework both in terms of that it is freely and, in its entirety, online, with no IP restrictions and that it is available in seven languages.”

The Praxis Framework was launched in 2014 in order to provide clear, coherent guidance on optimising project, programme and portfolio delivery. Adrian Dooley, Lead Author of the Praxis Framework feels this aligns with AIPM’s objective of developing project management competence.

“AIPM is dedicated to improving project management practices and competencies in the Australian market. They equip members with the necessary tools to add value to every project or programme they work on. I am delighted to be partnering with them to achieve these common goals.” Mr Dooley said.

This partnership between AIPM and the Praxis Foundation to publish the body of knowledge, method and encyclopaedia, is in addition to AIMP’s recent quality endorsement of the Praxis Framework Bridging Course. This course, administered by APMG, is a route for those certified in other Project and Programme management training to become a Praxis Framework practitioner.
