PM Review Journalist joins PMWJ Correspondent Team

Yu Yanjuan, also known as Spring, to report PM news from Beijing

22 December 2019 – Beijing, China and Dallas, TX, USA – The PM World has announced that Yu Yanjuan, the primary journalist for the Chinese project management publication PM Review, has accepted the role of International Correspondent for the PM World Journal (PMWJ). Her new role will officially begin in January 2020.

Yu Yanjuan (English name: Spring) graduated with a Bachelor's degree from the English Department of Beijing International Studies University (BISU) in China. She is now an English-language journalist and editor working for Project Management Review Magazine and website. She has interviewed over forty top experts in the field of project management. In the past, she has worked as a journalist and editor for other media platforms in China. She has also worked part-time as an English teacher in various training centers in Beijing.

According to PMWJ managing editor David Pells, "We have been cooperating with PM Review in China for the last year or so, including the publication of many of Spring's interviews with leading international experts. As I became more familiar with her knowledge about the project management field and network of contacts, as well as her excellent writing, it occurred to me that she would be a great correspondent for us."

According to Spring, "I am honored to accept the role of International Correspondent for the PMWJ and will continue to do interviews and report topics about China. The PMWJ is well known and respected in China and nearly all international experts that I have interviewed know who you are. Also, PMR leaders believe it is a win-win step forward. I will try my best to promote cooperation between PMR and PMWJ in order to help share PM wisdom across the globe."

Pells adds, "The project management profession is growing rapidly in China, perhaps more rapidly than in any other country. We have seen reports of the many big programs and projects implemented there in recent years. Now I see that many universities are teaching PM at multiple levels, Chinese PM societies and publications are expanding, and there seems to be increasing interaction with the international PM community. We will be happy to learn even more now from Spring going forward."

PM World Journal (PMWJ) is a monthly digital publication featuring dozens of articles, papers and stories about projects and project management around the
