Call for Papers: Digital Learning and Education in a Project Society

Special edition of Project Leadership and Society to be published in 2022

13 March 2021 – Maribor, Slovenia – The International Research Programme CaProSoc (Capabilities for delivering projects in the context of societal development) at Alma Mater Europaea ECM in Maribor has announced a Call for Papers for a Special Paper Collection to be published by Elsevier titled “Digital learning in a project society.”

The call invites authors to submit papers in various sectors, countries, and research fields, in project management and related disciplines. Empirical (quantitative, qualitative, mixed methods, action research) and conceptual studies are welcome, including review papers, that both feed the theoretical discourse and offer practical insights, as well as papers advancing our knowledge on digital teaching and learning to develop a project society far beyond the presentation of instruments and tools.

Potential topics include, but are not restricted to

- Identity, roles and new requirements
- Project competencies in/for a digital society
- Social and institutional inequalities
- New stakeholders and institutional change
- Public vs private knowledge goods and legal aspects
- Educating for a better (project) society

Paper submissions are welcome throughout 2021. To read full call for papers, click here. The information was also shared on CaProSoc’s Slack platform.
