According to PMWJ editor David Pells, “We are delighted to welcome Alessandro to our correspondents’ team. He replaces Massimo Pirozzi in this important position, as Massimo assumes a wider editorial support role for the journal. Alessandro comes highly recommended, as he is passionate about project management and has been very active in ISIPM for several years.”

Alessandro stated, “Thank you for this opportunity. I look forward to reporting about project management activities and developments in Italy. Italian industrial organizations have deep experience with projects and project management that has sometimes been overshadowed by political and economic problems. Now the public sector, IT organizations and many others are implementing better PM practices. It’s pretty exciting.”

Pells added, “As Italy and the rest of Europe emerge from the Covid pandemic and economies start to recover, projects and project management will be more important than ever. I’m glad we will have someone in Rome sharing news about the rebound with our readers.”
