Happiness, empathy, and the constant search for well-being are concepts inherited from our history and evolution. Some specific aspects of our human structure like emotions and perceptions shape our interpretation of reality, which in almost all cases differs between every individual.

Neuro-semantic guide us through different perspectives on how we can understand, be flexible, and adapt to different personalities and emotional structures leveraging the highest potential in human interactions. In this session, you will get an opportunity to learn how our personal structures combined with our senses recreate realities and generate emotional meta-states, and how we can induce the best reactions by being present using our perception channels as sources of information gathering. Luis shall also be touching upon the areas of Project Management Offices, Stakeholders Management, Demand Management, Strategy and Executive Communication skills.
