

Publishing News

Project Management Planning: From Practice to Applied Research

New project management book published by Peter Lang

3 November 2022 – New York, USA and Oxford, UK – Peter Lang has published a useful new book titled “Project Management Planning: From Practice to Applied Research” by Muhamed Abdomerovic. Mr. Abdomerovic is a very knowledgeable project planning and management expert with decades of relevant experience.

According to the book’s PR, Project Management Planning explores the science and art of handling planned responsibility and unexpected conditions. The processes of planning contents (initiating, planning, executing, controlling, closing) and the attributes of planning contents (scope, time, resources, cost, quality, risk, benefit, others) are generally common. For that reason, comprehensive project management planning applies across all types of projects and all kinds of planning situations, including, for example, the Agile sequence of shortterm investments or in Critical Chain Buffer management.

Evidence shows two massive gaps in project management planning across the field, which this book hopes to address.

The first gap is between current project management planning and its potential as a practical discipline. The second gap is between project management system knowledge and its potential as an applied research discipline. This book first explains how a project management plan develops from project management contents, before using the same tools to explain how project management system logic develops from project management system contents. Finally, it shows how project management system contents and its logic improve project management contents.

By understanding how a project management plan develops into a project management systems logic, we can implement strong plans across programs, businesses and corporations, organizations, and any entity for which managing plans is an integral part.

Muhamed Abdomerovic has learned project management planning over 40 years through information technology, construction, process industry, and energy sector projects exceeding $12.5 billion in budget. While employed in various positions, he has published over 50 journal articles, six Project Management World Congress proceedings, and four books, and has contributed to project management standards.

First published in August 2022, the 344-page book is available in hardcover, softcover or e-book. For more about the book, click here or purchase it on Amazon at <https://www.amazon.com/Project-Management-Planning->

Abdomerovic/dp/1433189348? , Barnes and Noble at

<https://www.barnesandnoble.com/w/project-management-planning-muhamed-abdomerovic/1141499629> and other book sellers.

Editor's note: Mr. Abdomerovic has contributed multiple articles over the years for the PM World Journal. Visit his author showcase page in the PM World Library at <https://pmworldlibrary.net/authors/muhamed-abdomerovic/>